Polymorphisms in the 5'-flanking region of the human RET gene in women with and without multiple endocrine neoplasia type 2. Mutations in the RET proto-oncogene, encoding a cell surface receptor protein, are the cause of autosomal dominant multiple endocrine neoplasia type 2 (MEN2), a disease characterized by the occurrence of medullary thyroid carcinoma (MTC), pheochromocytoma, and hyperparathyroidism. Mutation analysis of the RET gene is now the standard method for the investigation of hereditary MEN2. However, at least 5% of patients with the disease do not bear a RET germline mutation, suggesting that other factors also determine the occurrence of MEN2. Recently, we identified two polymorphisms in the 5'-flanking region of the RET gene in a family with MEN2 that was negative for RET germline mutations. We investigated these two polymorphisms in families with and without MTC. No statistically significant difference was found in the genotype and allele frequencies of these two polymorphisms between the two groups. However, when patients with MTC were excluded from the analysis, the Alu1/Alu1 allele frequency was significantly lower in the families without MTC (p Tag: Son of God Almighty God, Who through most mighty Isaiah has spoken of "the Redeemer of the world", of "the Sent One of God", of "the Branch of David"🔗
